COLLEAGUES AND FRIENDS
Dear colleagues and friends:

We’d like to thank the following organizations for their generous financial support for this important program: Morgan Stanley, Okay to Say, Latino Studies at the University of Texas at Austin, Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, Integral Care, and various departments at the University of Texas at Austin.

On behalf of the Steve Fund, I warmly welcome you to the fifth annual Young, Gifted & @ Risk Symposium – the nation’s only conference focused on the mental health and well-being of students of color. We are proud to be partnering this year with the University of Texas at Austin. The convening is an excellent opportunity to build awareness and knowledge, explore promising practices, and develop effective new strategies in support of the mental health and success of young people of color.

The Steve Fund is the nation’s only non-profit organization focused on promoting the mental health and emotional well-being of young people of color. We work with colleges and universities, campus leaders, students, non-profits, scholars, mental health practitioners, families, and with groups serving diverse populations.

At the time of our founding we knew that colleges and universities had a vital role to play in filling urgent gaps to better support the mental health of young people of color in our society and on our nation’s campuses. We did not suspect, however, that the situation would become even more dire as developments have unfolded in the recent past. The current challenges have only reaffirmed our commitment to partnering closely with colleges and universities to address the critical needs that many students now face. The University of Texas at Austin and our other higher education partners have our deep gratitude as we seek to better understand these challenges and build effective approaches to protect the mental health and emotional well-being of students of color.

The Steve Fund's Young, Gifted & @ Risk Conference at the University of Texas at Austin seeks to raise awareness among students, families, university administrators, faculty, mental health professionals and other stakeholders about the risks to mental health such as discrimination, microaggressions, imposter syndrome, marginalization, and isolation encountered by college students of color. Through interactive panel presentations of scholars and people with lived experience and breakout discussion groups, this convening aims to enlighten participants about risk factors affecting this demographic and protective factors that can be employed to optimize the college experience of all students.

Colleges and universities now have a powerful tool to better support the mental health of students of color. It is an opportune time for all of us, as we work together to expand the impact of our much-needed efforts. I encourage you to visit www.stevefund.org to learn more and explore our programs, services, and resources. Welcome to the conference! The Steve Fund looks forward to working with you closely on the road ahead.

Evan M. Rose
President of the Board, The Steve Fund
ABOUT THE STEVE FUND
The Steve Fund is the nation's only organization focused on supporting the mental, social and emotional health and well-being of young people of color. The Steve Fund works with colleges and universities, non-profits, researchers, mental health experts, families, and young people to promote programs and strategies that build understanding and assistance for the mental and emotional health of the nation's young people of color. The Fund holds an annual conference, Young, Gifted & @Risk, delivers on-campus and on-site programs and services at colleges and non-profits nationwide, and through tech partnerships provides direct services to young people of color.

Learn more about the Steve Fund at www.stevefund.org and about its programs and services at www.stevefund.org/programs.

ABOUT YOUNG, GIFTED & @RISK
Young, Gifted & @Risk is the Steve Fund's annual conference. It is co-sponsored by a different institutional higher education partner each year. We are delighted that this year our partner is the University of Texas at Austin.

Launched and named in 2014 at Brown University’s Center for the Study of Race and Ethnicity in America under the leadership of Professor Tricia Rose, the conference is a critical component of the Steve Fund's knowledge-building strategy. It is designed to bring together scholars; mental health practitioners; college, university and non-profit leaders; students; faculty; and community and family members in order to accomplish key objectives aligned with the Steve Fund’s mission: To build awareness and dialogue; to generate new knowledge about the challenges to mental health and emotional well-being of college students of color; and to identify and examine promising practices to meet the mental, social and emotional health and well-being needs among college students of color.

The conference fills a significant knowledge gap in addressing the needs of young people of color at a critical period in their lives by bringing together essential stakeholders with insightful presenters who all have key roles to play to promote the mental health and emotional well-being of the next generation. Our intent is to generate knowledge that stimulates effective practices. For this reason, the conference is not only important for the Steve Fund and the young people we serve, but for the success of higher education institutions, non-profits, and mental health practitioners working with our population.

The Steve Fund disseminates the knowledge generated at the conference to a broad audience through its Knowledge Center at stevefund.org to promote dialogue and awareness, and to expand knowledge on this issue across the nation.
Dear Conference Attendees:

Welcome to the fifth annual Young, Gifted and @Risk Conference. The University of Texas at Austin is honored to host this event in partnership with The Steve Fund, a national leader in addressing the mental health and well-being of young scholars of color.

From the nearly 80-year legacy of the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health to our recently established Dell Medical School, the university is making steady progress to meet its goals of transforming health care. In September, I announced a new grand challenge—“Whole Communities–Whole Health”—that calls upon faculty and staff to explore ways to foster the healthy development of children and families who struggle with adversity and rethink how studies are conducted on social, behavioral, and health issues. That includes youth from diverse backgrounds who come to our university to engage their talents and intellectual gifts in an atmosphere that is welcoming and inspirational.

Last year, we released the University Diversity and Inclusion Action Plan detailing our increased efforts to recruit students from underrepresented groups and expand our counseling and mental health diversity initiatives. In an interconnected world, diversity is essential to the success of every student at UT Austin. Just as it is important for students to learn with others from different backgrounds and experiences, it is vital that we listen to the challenges facing students of color and respond in ways that are supportive and effective.

I am grateful to The Steve Fund for helping students achieve their potential. Along with the UT Austin community, I look forward to strengthening our commitment to the success of students of color.

Sincerely,

Gregory L. Fenves
President
ABOUT THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS AT AUSTIN

Like the state it calls home, The University of Texas at Austin is a bold, ambitious leader. Ranked among the biggest and best research universities in the country, UT Austin is home to more than 51,000 students and 3,000 teaching faculty. Together we are working to change the world through groundbreaking research and cutting-edge teaching and learning techniques. Here, tradition and innovation blend seamlessly to provide students with a robust collegiate experience. Amid the backdrop of Austin, Texas, a city recognized for its creative and entrepreneurial spirit, the university provides a place to explore countless opportunities for tomorrow’s artists, scientists, athletes, doctors, entrepreneurs and engineers.

UT Austin embraces and encourages diversity in many forms, and strives to create an inclusive community that fosters an open and supportive learning, teaching and working environment. Our strength as a university draws from our wide range of perspectives and experiences, and we support a free exchange of ideas alongside thoughtful consideration of our differences. As both the current UT Austin president and provost have stated, diversity, and excellence are mutually reinforcing.

ABOUT LATINO STUDIES AT UT AUSTIN, HOST AND PLANNING COMMITTEE LEADER

Latino Studies at The University of Texas at Austin consists of three interconnected units that provide cutting edge research, rigorous teaching, and public programming on the Mexican American and Latina/o communities of the Americas. The Latino Research Initiative, the Department of Mexican American and Latina/o Studies, and the Center for Mexican American Studies work independently and collectively to advance the academic, intellectual, and social agendas of the UT campus and broader community. Together, we stand proudly in solidarity with students of color, undocumented, incarcerated, poor, disabled, trans, and queer peoples—and those at the many intersections. We remain committed to supporting students and the broader community in the ongoing struggle to realize a fiercely just and affirmative future.

ABOUT THE COUNSELING AND MENTAL HEALTH CENTER AT UT AUSTIN, HOST COMMITTEE MEMBER

The Counseling and Mental Health Center (CMHC) provides counseling, psychiatric, consultation, and prevention services that facilitate students’ academic and life goals and enhance their personal growth and well-being. Included among its programs and services, CMHC offers groups and classes, a 24-7 crisis line, MindBody labs, an integrated health program with University Health Services, the Counselors in Academic Residence program, the Thrive at UT smartphone app to enhance student well-being and a number of prevention and outreach activities. A team of Diversity Counseling and Outreach Specialists (DCOS) offer drop-in identity-based support and discussion groups and collaborate with campus partners to provide services to students. DCOS stay attuned to the needs of students in order to continually improve access to services and quality of care. Leading innovations in college student mental health, CMHC was recently awarded a three-year grant from the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health to create a program called Well-being in Learning Environments to work with faculty to embed conditions for well-being in the classroom.

The importance of connecting the social determinants of mental health as they relate to college students of color, including discrimination, minority status stress, and stigma around mental health services cannot be understated. The college experience of diverse students of color includes microaggressions, negative stereotypes, impostor feelings, isolation, and marginalization, especially in light of recent, nationally publicized events involving racism, Islamophobia, hate crimes, police brutality, and violence, both on and off-campus. Recent efforts have been designed to provide institutions of higher learning with recommendations for creating campuses with the consciousness and framework for establishing and maintaining campus environments that are conducive to the mental health and well-being of students of color.

Q&A
CULTURE, IDENTITY, AND MENTAL HEALTH AMONG COLLEGE STUDENTS OF COLOR

Students of color including, but not limited to: students of African descent; students of American Indian, Alaska Native, and Native Hawaiian descent; students of Asian descent; students of Latinx descent, and students of Middle Eastern/ North African descent, encounter and experience unique stressors. Recognizing the importance of intersectionality is crucial to understanding the mental health needs of students of color. In addition, it is essential to respond to students of color mental health needs with culturally competent responses, particularly when the mental health provider is of a different race, culture, or ethnicity than the student.
